Jet freighter crashes; 3 die

NOV 4 1973

The fuselage of a Pan American World Airways 707 cargo jet smouldered on a runway yesterday after a fiery crash at Boston's Logan Airport. The four-engine freighter, carrying mail and pressurized cylinders of nitric acid, was bound from New York to Scotland when the pilot reported signs of a cargo fire and asked permission to land at Logan. The three men aboard died when the plane crashed. They were identified as John J. Zammett, Cold Spring Harbor, N.Y., pilot; Gene W. Ritter, New Canaan, Conn., first officer, and Davis Melvin, Ithaca, N.Y., flight engineer.
